NEWS LETTER FROM STATE DEPARTMENTS

COLUMBUS, O.—The Capital City is in gala attire with flags and bunting floating from all blocks in the downtown business section, extending a warm and cordial greeting to members of the famous Rainbow Division, holding their annual convention on Friday, Saturday and Sunday of this week. Thousands of visitors are expected from the seven states from which the Division was recruited and the War Vets who displayed such exceptional loyalty and gallantry along the Western Front in those trying times during the World War, will have a great time visiting with old buddies and comrades recounting deeds of valor and heroism which occurred in the various sectors.

The Capitol building housing state officers must indeed look unsightly when it is mistaken for the Penitentiary. That is just what happened several days ago when a man and wife from up state walked into the north corridor and the man asked a passing employee if "this was the Penitentiary." The latter with a sense of humor replied: "Step inside that office, take a look at the inmates, then judge for yourself." The visitors after the inspection stated that they were looking for the big prison and never having been in Columbus before, thought that the big stone pile in Capital Square was that institution. They were directed to the "pen" and left stating that they didn't want the folks back home to hear of their mistake.

Secretary of State Clarence J. Brown reports the collection of $657,874.54 in corporation fees alone for the first six months of 1928. In 1927 fees collected the first six months totaled $274,987.94 and the last six months $389,530.85, making the fees collected the first six months of the present year exceed those of the entire twelve months of last year by $255,776. In spite of the corporation receipts being more than doubled, the work of the branch has been handled without delay and the day received. Such a record speaks well for Mr. Brown's executive ability.

Camp Perry, on Lake Erie, will become the scene of great military activity when the 74th Infantry Brigade and 12th Medical Regiment go into camp on Saturday of the present week, to remain until July 28. The former includes two full peace time regiments of Infantry and the Medical Regiment Headquarters, Ambulance and Hospital Battalions. The regular strength of the 74th comprises 123 officers and 2,014 men, the Medical Regiment 42 officers and 437 men. The brigade is recruited from Central and Southern Ohio and the Medical from the Central, Eastern and Northern part of the state. Adjutant General Frank D. Henderson will be in command of the Brigade and Col. Harry H. Snively of the Medical Regiment.

We are now approaching the season of poliomyelitis (or infantile paralysis) and Director of Health John E. Menger, sounds a warning to the people of Ohio. The state health department has unmistakable evidence that the dreaded disease is transmitted and protective measures are urged. No health official will shrink responsibilities, states Dr. Menger, by neglecting to do all in his power to prevent the spread of the disease, but he must be informed of the existence, or suspected existence of each case, and the laws of the state definitely fix the responsibility for reporting all such cases to him. Last year a total of 1205 cases, with 167 deaths, were recorded. Just how many cripples resulted from the scourge of 1927 will never be of record, as health department officials state they have good reason to believe that not one-fourth of the actual cases of poliomyelitis were recognized.

Adjutant General Frank D. Henderson, now in attendance at Field Training of the Ohio National Guard at Camp Perry in charge of the 74th Infantry Brigade, served during the war as Major of the 166th Regiment, Col. Harry H. Snively in command of the Medical Regiment, previous to the World War was director in chief of the American Red Cross at Kiev, Russia, and the Evacuation Hospital at Khof. During the war he served with the 37th Ohio Division with the sanitary train. Following the war he returned to Poland where he was instrumental in abolishing the terrible epidemic of typhoid fever and for which he received the decorations of the Cross of the Brave, Memorial and War Crosses. He was also decorated with a cross by King Albert of Belgium.

FARMER TAKES OWN LIFE

John W. Sipe, 80, prominent retired farmer, was found dead at 5 o'clock Saturday morning at his home on the Fairfield and Yellow Springs Pike, four miles northwest of Yellow Springs, with a self-inflicted bullet wound in his head.

The aged man had used a .22 long calibre, single-shot rifle, placing the muzzle in his mouth, the bullet coursing upward and lodging in the head. He had taken bed clothes from the bed to make a pallet on the floor, reclined on his back, and was found still clutching the rifle with the muzzle in his mouth, by his son, Edgar, who investigated when he found his father had not arised.

Mr. Sipe slept downstairs and other members of the family, who were upstairs, did not hear the rifle shot. Dr. E. M. Chambliss, coroner, said death had evidently taken place about midnight. Melancholia was blamed for the suicide by members of the family, who said the aged man had been suffering from a cancer on the hand and had not recovered from an attack of grip suffered last winter.

Mr. Sipe is survived by his widow; three sons, Edgar, Ernest and John Sipe, all at home; one daughter, Mrs. Thomas Ryan, Springfield, a sister, Mrs. Ida Feinreich, Boise City, Idaho and a brother, Walter Sipe, near Springfield.

The body was taken in charge by Littleton Brothers, Yellow Springs funeral directors.

The 2:14 pace for purses of $1,000 on Wednesday's card has 19 entrants, and the 2:18 trot for Friday, also for $1,000 purse has 22 horses entered. All the entry lists for the stakes were closed in April. An elimination contest will be held at the fair for the purpose of selecting the winning demonstration teams in food, clothing, livestock and livestock judging.

Each winning team, with the leader, will be sent to the Ohio state fair. The State Fair organization will pay railroad fares and the club department will pay the living expenses of the team while they are in Columbus. A new feature prize this year is a trip to the Cincinnati stock yard and through the packing plant for boys in the market production clubs. This trip is being financed by the McDowell and Torrence Lumber Company. Boys in this club feed five or more pigs to a market weight of from 200 to 225 pounds. F. B. Turnbull is the member of the fair board in charge of the beef and dairy calf club exhibits.

Two special prizes of $25 each have been offered in the beef calf class. P. B. Turnbull, Angus breeder, will give $25 to the boy showing the champion steer, providing the champion is an Angus. E. S. Kelly of Whitehall farm, near Yellow Springs, has given $25 to be used as special prizes for Herefords.

Attorney Johnson Opens His Campaign In Bellefontaine

Attorney Frank L. Johnson opened his campaign for the Republican nomination for congress in the Seventh district Tuesday when he addressed the Young Men's Republican Club in Bellefontaine.

Attorney Johnson reviewed the attack of Congressman Charles Brand on the floor of congress in which he attacked the Republicanism of Herbert Hoover and was attempted to inflame farmers against the presidential nominee.

Launching into Congress man Brand's attack on Hoover because he was against the McNary-Hagen farm relief bill, Johnson said that the Republican nominee was against that measure because the attorney general had already ruled that it was unconstitutional and not workable. Hoover, he said, believed that some relief should be given the farmers that is within the constitution.

Hoover's plans for farm relief the speaker outlined as follows: Formation of co-operative marketing associations without any expense to the farmer. As the farmer is often hard pressed for ready money the plan is for the government to make an advance to him through these co-operative marketing associations, so as to give him cash.

Aurora Borealis Was Fine Display

Did you see the Aurora Borealis last night? If not you missed one of the finest displays of that character ever seen here.

The phenomenon is always credited to reflection of the sun on northern icebergs. However astronomers now say spots on the sun are the cause. For a time there was a pink glow across the north followed by a bow of light from which other streams of light radiated. It was first noticed about 8:30 here and was at its best about 9 P. M. Many people were at a loss to know just what it was as this year it was much different than in years past.

Butter Production Cost Going Higher

Less butter on the market, and higher production costs for the butter which is produced, are features of the dairy situation in Ohio this spring. Late season, poor hay and pasture conditions, and other factors are responsible for this state of affairs, according to the rural economics department of the Ohio State University.

Butter production in Ohio in May of this year was estimated at 7,625,800 pounds as against 9,042,000 pounds in May of last year, by the federal Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Production of butter for the United States in May of this year was 8.47 per cent under that of May, 1927. Production for the first two months of 1928 was above that of 1927, but March, April, May and June showed such a slump that the total production for the first half of the year was considerably less than for the first half of last year. The situation is reflected sharply in the holdings of storage butter on June 1. For the United States these amounted to 10,020,000 pounds as compared with 25,404,000 pounds on June 1, 1927.

Pasture conditions in Ohio and the United States as a whole, are far below normal. Only one state, North Dakota, had a lower condition of pasture on June 1, than Ohio. Cold, late spring and dry weather during May, slowed down the development of pasture. Excessive winter-killing of sweet clover and other legumes, has reduced both pasture and hay prospects. This, together with much higher prices for dairy cows, means increased cost of production to Ohio dairymen.

Several hours were required by the combined efforts of firemen and bucket brigades to bring the flames under control.

ONE SUSPECT IS BEING HELD FROM DAYTON

Dayton police and Greene County officials are joining in an effort to solve the supposed murder of Louis Radke, 44 years old, 252 Burkhardt avenue, Dayton, near Trebleton Station, July 8.

Detectives Thomas Woolenhaupt and Edward Hoover, of the Dayton department, and Sheriff Ohmer Tate, Xenia, detained Felix Lilly, 40, on suspicion of implication in the case. Lilly was found at John Colson's camp, near the Little Miami River bridge, Tuesday.

The Dayton detectives acted on information obtained from various sources. Sheriff Tate, Tuesday, conferred with detectives with reference to steps to be taken in unraveling the mystery, and the arrest of Lilly as the first person to be examined was decided.

Radke's body was found on the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks, the body having been mutilated. It was alleged at the time that appearances indicated the body had been thrown on the rails to divert suspicion. It is the expressed belief that Radke was strangled on his head and killed away from the place where his body was found.

Detectives Woolenhaupt and Hoover and Sheriff Tate collected as evidence in the case an ax, hatchet, hammer and ax blade. It is said one of the implements held by the police, has blood upon it. The allegation is made that Radke was robbed of $50.

Coroner F. M. Chambliss, Xenia, said he would conduct an inquest Friday and that the victim's body would be exhumed at once.

Radke's skull was crushed so badly by the train that it may be impossible to determine whether a blow on his head was the cause of death, although this fact is to be determined and other circumstances will be investigated.

INTO THE HALL OF FAME

LOUIS AGASSIZ

S.B. MORSE

HENRY CLAY

JAMES MADISON

JOHN G. WHITTIER

RUFUS CHOATE

JOHN PAUL JONES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

OUR more great Americans were honored recently when busts of them made by leading sculptors of this country were unveiled in the Hall of Fame at New York University on University Heights in New York city. They represented achievement in widely different fields of activity for one was a scientist, another was a poet, another a lawyer and the fourth an inventor. They were Louis Agassiz, John Greenleaf Whittier, Rufus Choate, and Samuel Finley Breese Morse and the addition of these four now brings the number of portrait sculptures which have already been unveiled up to 48.

Of the 66 men and women have been elected to the Hall of Fame and broke tablets commemorating their achievement have been placed, but money for placing the busts of the remaining 17 has not yet been raised. Busts of James Madison, Henry Clay and John Paul Jones have been prepared for their niches, but at the time of the announcement of the plans for this year's unveiling, sufficient funds had not been guaranteed to assure the inclusion of these three notables in the 1928 ceremony.

The history of the Hall of Fame, in brief, is this: On March 5, 1900, the council of New York University accepted a gift of $100,000, afterward increased to $250,000, from a donor whose name was withheld, for the erection and completion on University Heights, New York city, of a building called "The Hall of Fame for Great Americans."

The hall was dedicated May 30, 1901, when twenty-six national associations each unveiled one of the bronze tablets in the colonnade. May 30, 1907, eleven new tablets were unveiled, orations being given by the governors of New York and Massachusetts. May 21, 1921, twenty-six new tablets were unveiled. April 27, 1922, a temporary bust of Gen. U. S. Grant was unveiled by Marshal Joffre of France.

In May, 1922, busts were unveiled of Edgar Allan Poe, George Washington, Miss Maria Mitchell, Gilbert Stuart and Mark Hopkins. The busts of Robert Fulton and Horace Mann had been unveiled several years before. May 22, 1923, there were unveiled busts of R. W. Emerson, H. W. Beecher, Frances E. Willard, U. S. Grant (permanent), R. E. Lee, Alexander Hamilton, and Abraham Lincoln. On May 13, 1924, busts were unveiled of John Adams, Rev. Phillips Brooks, Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain), Peter Cooper, James E. Earle, Joseph Henry, Anthony Jackson, Thomas Jefferson, William T. G. Morton, and Alice F. Palmer.

On May 12, 1925, busts were unveiled of Roger Williams, advocate of religious freedom and founder of Rhode Island; James Kent, chancellor of the state of New York; Daniel Webster, statesman; Daniel Boone, explorer and frontiersman; Jonathan Edwards, theologian; George Peabody, financier and educator; Eli Whitney, inventor of the cotton gin; Edwin Booth, actor; and Augustus Saint Gaudens, sculptor. On May 5, 1927, the following were honored: John James Audubon, naturalist; William Ellery Channing, preacher and theologian; Admiral David Glasgow Farragut, Civil War naval commander; Benjamin Franklin, scientist and statesman; Washington Irving, man of letters and historian; Mary Lyon, founder of Mount Holyoke college.

Massachusetts has good reason to look upon the Hall of Fame unveilings this year as something of a Day state triumph, for of the four men thus honored she claims three as native sons and the fourth, a citizen by adoption, sleeps in her soil in the shadow of her great university. However, there is something of the irony of fate in the fact that two of these sons of hers, who later became world-famous, did not fare very well at her hands in their youth. She let one almost starve when he was a struggling young painter, and she ostracized and virtually drove from her borders the other when he became a champion of abolition at a time when that movement was far from popular in New England.

Samuel Finley Breese Morse was the painter. Morse was born in Charlestown, Mass., April 27, 1791. When a student at Yale he became interested in art and upon his graduation in 1810 he went to London to study under the famous Benjamin West. England hailed him as a wonderfully great artist, but when he returned to Boston and set up his studio his countrymen showed no interest in his pictures. The inventive genius, which was to make him famous later, was alive even then and in 1816 he and his brother invented an improvement in a pump for a fire engine. Although Eli Whitney, inventor of the cotton gin, and President Jeremiah Day of Yale were enthusiastic over the invention, the public was not.

Finally Morse decided to go to New York and continue his career as an artist, and there in the face of discouragement and poverty persisted until he gained the recognition which he deserved. Although at the age of forty he seemed to have reached an artistic career, he was still interested in invention and in 1832, while returning from Europe, got the idea for the electro-magnetic telegraph from a certain Dr. Charles T. Jackson of Boston, who was a passenger on the same ship. Morse perfected his invention in 1837 and for the next few years vainly tried to get congress to appropriate funds to develop its use. Success came at last when he had all but abandoned hope and when the day came for the official demonstration, the message which was ticked off over the line which led from the United States senate chamber to Baltimore, 80 miles away, was: "What hath God wrought?" Morse lived to see his epoch-making invention used all over the world and when he died in 1872 he carried to his grave in Greenwood cemetery in New York city the greatest honors that the nations of the world could bestow upon him.

The story of John Greenleaf Whittier, the beloved Quaker poet, the "American Robert Burns" is similar in some respects to that of Morse. He was born December 17, 1807 at Haverhill, Mass. His youth was one of toil as a farmer boy until a wandering Scotchman, a tramp, struck the poetic fire in his soul by reciting some of Burns' lines to him. Through a devoted sister and the editor of the local newspaper, later famous as William Lloyd Garrison, the prophet of abolition, the boy's verses were published and he was given a chance for better schooling.

His contributions to the New England Weekly Review carried his name afar and by 1830 he was editor of that journal. But the death of his father took him back to the rocky hillside farm near Haverhill and there he remained for three years. In the meantime the abolition movement was gaining ground and it was a cause which appealed to the young poet. He became secretary of the Anti-Slavery society and editor of the Haverhill Gazette, which he made an abolition organ. But abolition was anathema to the New England mill owners and Whittier was forced to leave the state, as were Garrison and others.

After a short time in New York Whittier went to Philadelphia as editor of the Freeman and there a mob sacked his office and threatened his life. In 1840, he returned to Amesbury Mass., to make his home and when the slavery issue was raised again after the Mexican war he went to Washington to become editor of the National Intelligencer, an anti-slavery paper. When the Civil War ended the question of slavery for all time, Whittier returned to his home in Massachusetts and the belligerent abolitionists once more became the Quaker poet, desirous to "bury in the waters of oblivion all the bitter things I said in the strife."

When the Centennial celebration came in 1876 he was chosen to write the ode which should sing the glories of the nation on its one hundredth birthday. But for all this honor and the many others that came to him, he remained the simple poet of the people, beloved by simple people all over the world, and by none more than those of his own state among whom he died on September 7, 1892.

The third son of the Bay state who was honored in the Hall of Fame this year was Rufus Choate, lawyer, orator and scholar, of whom it was once said, "His personal magnetism combined with his wealth of learning and his strong sense place him among the greatest forensic advocates that America has produced. He may fairly be ranked as the equal of Lord Brougham." Choate was born at Essex, Mass., October 1, 1798.

While a student at Dartmouth college he was so strongly influenced by the great speech of Daniel Webster in the famous Dartmouth college case that he determined to study law. After his graduation from Dartmouth in 1819 he studied another year at that institution and then entered the law school at Harvard. After a brief time in the office of the attorney-general of the United States he opened his law office in Danvers, Mass., and in 1820 was elected to congress where he distinguished himself the next year by a speech on the tariff.

In 1841 Choate was elected to the United States senate in the place of Daniel Webster, who had been appointed secretary of state by President Harrison, and soon proved that he was a worthy successor of the great orator. Among his most brilliant speeches, which are ranked among the greatest ever delivered in the senate, were those on the Oregon boundary, the tariff, the fiscal bank bill, the Smithsonian institution and the annexation of Texas. For the next twenty years he was prominent in national affairs until his health failed and he died in Halifax, Nova Scotia, July 13, 1859, while on a journey to Europe to seek to regain his lost health.

"I cannot afford to waste time in making money," once declared Louis Agassiz and in that sense he summed up his life-long devotion to the ideal that made him one of the greatest scientists the world has ever known. Although he was born in Switzerland, America claims him as her own since he came to this country in 1846 at the age of thirty-nine and spent the rest of his life here. At one time Napoleon III of France offered him the directorship of the great Paris botanical gardens and a seat in the French senate, both great honors and highly remunerative. But Agassiz's reply was that he found the fauna and flora of this country too interesting ever to desire to leave it.

Nature study was his all-absorbing passion. He gave eighteen hours of every day to it. "There is never a moment except when I am asleep that I am not joyfully occupied," he once said. "Give me the hours you say here you and I will receive them as most precious gifts." He cared nothing for money. "I am not a quarter of a dollar ahead in the world, and never hope to be," is another of his statements. And this was made at a time when business began to be a god in this country. By his personality and his devotion to science he awoke in Americans a greater appreciation for the work of the scientists and he did much to popularize nature study in this country. Agassiz died in 1873 and his grave in Cambridge, Mass., is marked by a massive boulder from the Aargau in Switzerland, where some of his earliest geological studies were carried on.

Louise Brooks

Louise Brooks, a petite brunette whose dancing in Ziegfeld's Follies and "Louis the 14th" was one of the sensations of a recent theatrical season, was signed by a prominent motion picture producer to a long-term contract, following her outstanding work in "The American Venus." Miss Brooks is a native of Wichita, Kan. She has jet-black hair, dark-brown eyes, and weighs 120 pounds.

Uncommon Sense

By John Blake

CONTROL

GOLFERS who were astonished at the remarkable record of Bobbie Jones, who some time ago defeated all the American amateurs at their own game, can remember the time when this lad, on missing a putt, would stamp on his putter, or throw it violently away.

Jones had temperance, which is necessary to all high achievement.

But before he could become a master of the game, he had to take the temper out of his temperament, and this, after long self-discipline, he has succeeded in doing.

Sometimes qualities which are the real elements of success become obstacles to success.

The Bible, written many years ago, tells us that he who ruleth his own spirit is greater than he who taketh a city.

But in all probability the men who took cities in those days ruled their spirits first, so they combined two sorts of greatness.

Then men who do great things in the world are usually nervous, imaginative men, who have high ideals of the way things should be done, and who are impatient with themselves for not attaining those ideals.

That is why they get into rages when they make mistakes, and because of these rages continue to make more and more mistakes.

To manage oneself is a long hard job, yet it must be done, and done efficiently before one can manage anybody else, or succeed in a great task.

There is little doubt that the Jones clan will succeed in life as well as in golf, if work as well as play.

He has the intelligence to know that superiority in a sport is really nothing, and he has the determination to exercise the self-government which will enable him to succeed in other things.

It is customary to regard young men who are prone to fly into violent rages over their failures as unfitted for life.

This is a mistake. The fact that they do fly into rages proves that they know what they ought to do, and have no patience with themselves when they cannot do it.

It is the spring in the steel which makes it superior to iron, but the spring must be controlled and carefully adjusted if it is to be useful in mechanics.

Sometimes the slow plodding temperament will go farther than the brilliant one, but never if the brilliant one is properly managed.

All the world's greatest geniuses have been eccentric. But it is a mistake to regard eccentricity as genius. The men who have reduced their eccentricities to the minimum, said that a constant check on them are those who are most likely to get into the Hall of Fame—after they are dead—and to enjoy the regards of high civilization while they are living.

Young Mr. Jones has set a valuable example not only to golfers but to all young men everywhere.

Learning to control himself was a tough job. But he did it, and will be able to continue to do it whenever it is necessary.

Unusual in Size

The tallest monument of stone is the Washington monument, 555 feet high, but the largest monolith is in Karnak, Egypt, being 106 feet high. The highest chimney in the Old World, measuring 474 feet, is in Glasgow. The largest insect in use is the Croton of New York, which is 88 miles long; but the longest ever built is in Peru, 860 miles in length.

Sight of Animals

The biological survey says that the crystalline lens varies somewhat in the eyes of different mammals. Magnification of the object may sometimes result, but it is impossible to tell the comparative impression on the retina and the optic nerve. Should man appear three times his normal size to animals, all other objects would also be magnified three times.

True Perfumes

To distinguish perfume truly, take the stopper from each crystal vial and for a moment move it gently back and forth until the preservative alcohol has evaporated, and only the essence remains. It is then only greeted by the subtle call of the pure "odors," and the fragrance of one's choice becomes unmistakable.

When I Grow Up

A little girl in each bedroom,
 Chasing her dolls and
 Toys, while I'm here in my house
 When I am grown.

A pony on the back porch,
 While rabbits are in the yard;
 And, though I'll be a big house,
 No back tub anywhere.

A room just full of jack-knives
 And wooden things to make;
 Another full of pirate books,
 Another full of cake.

I'll have fireworks every night
 And make a lot of noise,
 And picture shows each morning
 For all my girls and boys.

My floors will be real slippy,
 With little rugs that slide—
 And, then, I think that I shall sleep
 In a room just outside.

Sauce for the Goose

By JOHN HART

FLORENCE DAVIDSON was one of those persons that practice what they preach. Her preaching was done through the columns of the Evening Gazette under the caption, "Advice to the Lovelorn," by Arabella Anderson.

Every day, except Sunday, Florence answered questions of young women, and some young men, in regard to love affairs, preceding the replies with an article of general advice.

These articles written by Florence lately had been accumulated and published in pamphlet form under the title, "Keep Them Guessing," and these pamphlets were distributed free of charge to the readers of the Gazette who submitted the necessary coupon.

Florence was a strong advocate of "guessing" in love affairs. She argued that a young man's interest became stimulated when he found himself unable to fathom the depths of his idol's nature.

Because Florence practiced what she preached, Harvey Roberts was kept constantly on the anxious seat. She never would admit definitely that she would marry him, but whenever he came convinced his case was hopeless she would be sure to lend him some fresh encouragement by means of a few choice words of sentiment. He was "kept guessing."

Harvey did not realize that he was the constant subject of excitement for Arabella Anderson of the Gazette. Indeed, he was not aware that Florence acted in that capacity on the newspaper, although, of course, he knew she held some position there.

Yes, Harvey was experienced upon matters of the heart, but the readers of the Gazette might profit; but from this it must not be inferred that Florence did not care for him. She really was in love with him, but felt she must follow Arabella Anderson's advice in order to keep him on the matrimonial eligible list.

One day Harvey called for her at the Gazette office and she lived with her in their modest dwelling where she lived with her mother.

"Shall I see you this evening?" he inquired. She had been particularly unimpaired, and he was confident she would be glad to have him call.

Dolf Ackers Breaks In

By AD SCHUSTER

"IT ISN'T a choice between Mary and art," Dolf Ackers reasoned. "It's taking the only one that is possible for me."

A lad who was out at the elbow and deeply in love with a girl who did not even suspect the fact, counted his twenty-seven dollars, the results of months of privation, and made his plans.

"I have heard of that art colony in the mountains. There will be some one there who can tell me if I know how to draw, some one who can teach me and make me a job. Then, when I become famous and can wear a big broad black hat and a flowing beard, I will come back and paint a picture of Mary which will be hung in the best gallery in the world and...

Dolf, leaning against the fence, looked at the sky and Mary, passing by, looked at him and smiled.

The lad walked to Wilkett and the colony of artists. Here he found log-cabin made into studios, and here he saw men and women who looked prosperous and happy. He and his bundle of clothes and paints close and wished he were brave enough to approach one of these wonderful men.

Always he put off. They seemed so busy, and so interested in one another, and he was so much out of their picture. Dolf bought food in the colony's store, making his money go as far as possible, but he knew his time was limited. These people painted real pictures. They were successful. What would they think of a ragged lad who had nothing but ambition? He wandered down the road and to the little village of the railroad crossing. There were ten houses here and full of people who were not artists. Dolf looked for a job and because he knew telegraphy was put to work in the station. On nothing but a short line road in the mountains could employment be so casual, or pay so low.

"I'll be one of those fellows yet," he said, whenever an artist from the colony came in to take the train. "I'll save my money, rent a cottage some where and paint. Then they'll see. But I've just got to paint something first, and get some better clothes, maybe."

He started his studio career before he had planned for his railroad job ended. Yet there was enough money with which to rent an abandoned shack not far from the colony. The boy lived there, working, and eating as little as he could to make his work as good or bad—but he knew it was all his own. Into it he found he was putting something of what he had dreamed he could do.

"Living near those fellows," he said, jerking his thumb toward the colony, "wasn't I just one of them, after all? A lot of confidence." And so he painted until his money ran out, and when the food was gone he laughed. It was queer, it struck him, to be marooned with pictures. Pretty soon he would go out and shout so loud that a crowd would come, all the men and women from the colony, and then he would tell them of his pictures and they would buy and Mary, Mary would say, "Why that is Dolf Ackers, my chum of childhood." He looked in the food box, turned it upside down, and gathered the crumbs.

The entire address—it has frequently been republished—makes about 20,000 words, says Claude M. She relates a very interesting story of China and the people in that country.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Ewbank will move to Beavercreek where Mr. Ewbank is superintendent of the schools. Mrs. Louise Ewbank expects to move to Columbus about October first where she will reside with her daughter, Marguerite, who graduates this fall from the Grant Hospital training school.

Mrs. Ellen Taggart Purdon, of Cincinnati, has been spending several days here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Taggart.

A COMMUNICATION

C. P. O. Box No. 1284, Shanghai, China, June 1st, 1929.

Dear Editor:

I have just read articles by missing-link seekers. In one was reproduced a photo—an ape's foot much like a human foot. The author said it proved our ape ancestry. Recently I handled a snap-shot of an islander with a tall nearly 4 inches long. Another proof! But a few years ago I saw in Japan a stuffed calf with a human face—a strong proof that "we've sprung from cows!" So what are we to think? The articles amused as they said "believers in their theory were of 'up-to-date,' 'modern,' 'minds.' But their 'new' ideas seem like plagiarisms. These 'superior-minded' men say we came up from the monkey and are even in some sense divine! The Chinese of old say a monkey—excepting his face—became not only man but also a god! his temples and is worshipped in China. I enclose a monkey-god.

The Chinese say he was hatched, by gentle zephyrs, from a stone egg on a rocky mountain, to be a delight to the upper-god. But, alas, he was a trouble-maker. He was ambitious and his exploits caused him to be acclaimed king of the animals and to wax strong. Thro Long-Wang he got an iron rod which he could expand at will to span the sky or contract so as to fit in his ear—magic wand! Pu-ti taught him how to fly and how to change himself into 72 different shapes. What he could not do is hard to say. But as he gained in power, and his friends said he was worthy to rule heaven, he wished to do so. Many things made league with him and celebrated it with feasting. But our monkey got drunk, and while unconscious he was taken to hell. He awoke, overcame the powers of hell and escaped. He was accused to T'oh Wang who thought to keep Monkey quiet by bestowing upon him the title "Heavenly Horse-keeper." He was elated; but learning it was an empty title, he, in fierce anger, smashed heaven's gate and overturned the throne. The upper-god called upon the hosts of heaven and hell to overcome the monkey; but in vain. After the monkey's victory the upper-god, in fright, conceded monkey's demands, made him a god, conferred upon him a real title, and allowed him to live in heaven in a grand castle. But monkey-god was not godly! He would steal, steal and eat the peaches of everlasting life and from Lao Ching's palace, stole and ate his pills of immortality. Doubly immortal, proud of his powers, he constantly mocked the other gods. He became unbearably overbearing. A great conference was called in heaven to which great Buddha was summoned. The monkey-god even tried to mock this, the "self-existent one!" "I have heard that you are a great jumper, is it true?" asked the Buddha. "I'll bet you can't leap out of my hand. If you do I'll make you King of heaven." The monkey eagerly answered, "I can turn over 108,000 li in one somersault, why shouldn't I leap out of your hand?" Then the monkey-god turned a somersault to the five white pillars—limits of the universe—and wrote his name on one, to show he'd been there, and turned a somersault back in triumph. "Didn't I turn out of your hand?" asked the monkey-god. "See what you wrote on my finger!" the Buddha answered, and showed Monkey his name on his finger—one of the pillars! Monkey gazed amazed. Buddha seized him, put him under a mountain, fed him with hot iron to punish him for his many sins, and said, "After a number of years a monk named Dang Sen will come and free you. You shall follow and guard him as he goes for the books of Buddha from the Western Paradise." Years sped; all came true; Monkey reformed, became true to his title, "The holiest in the heaven," and people began to worship him.

We teach my Brownies not these myths but the truth as given in the Bible. God's word for it satisfies us. Chinese teachings do not enable nor make life safe in China; but where God's Word holds sway is goodness, safety and life. Pray that the Chinese may know the Bible, and know Jesus Christ—God and man—as their own precious Savior. With kindest regards,

Yours in Christ's glad service,
Rev. H. G. C. HALLOCK.

THE HARBOR THAT—
If you will count the number of strawberries on a plate and name the last one to correspond to that letter of the alphabet—oh, goodie, it's a good guessing—the letter will be the initial of your "one and only."

Period Of Smaller Hog Receipts Here

Decrease In Breeding Operations Indicates Drop In Supplies of Pork This Year

Another corner has apparently been turned in the "hog cycle" of agriculture in the United States, bringing in a period of comparatively small supplies of hogs for market.

"We are apparently reducing breeding operations because of the low prices of hogs for the past couple of years, and the high price of feeds," says a recent statement of the department of rural economics of the Ohio State University.

The price of hogs is determined quite largely by the number which are for sale or which are received at the leading hog markets. The June 1 pig survey conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture, through the Post Office Department, and the rural mail carriers, showed that in Ohio this spring 4.8 per cent fewer sows farrowed than last spring, and in the United States the decrease was 7.7 per cent. The number of pigs saved this spring in Ohio was 3 per cent less than the number saved last spring, and for the United States as a whole, the decrease was 7.1 per cent. Reports on the number of sows bred or to be bred for farrowing in the coming fall point to a decrease in the fall pig production compared with that of the fall of 1927, of 10 or 20 per cent.

Hog receipts at the leading markets during the first six months of this year have been 20 per cent higher than during the same period a year ago. When hog prices are low, especially if at the same time corn prices are high, breeding stock is sent to market.

The result of throwing breeding stock on the market is to still further increase the market receipts and to force the price still lower. From January 1 to June 30 of this year, 19,429,000 hogs were received at the 20 leading markets of the country as compared with 16,528,000 for the same period of last year. On January 1 this year there were about 8 per cent more hogs on hand than on the same date a year previously. But the larger receipts this year indicate that this surplus has already been sent to market.

This spring's survey shows a decrease of about 7 per cent in the spring pig crop from the crop of the spring of 1927, a decrease which is about the same for the corn belt and for the United States as a whole. It represents about four million head of hogs in the United States, and about three million in the corn belt states.

These reports, according to the rural economics department, indicate that the market receipts of hogs during the next twelve months will average considerably smaller than those of the last twelve months.

Poor Music

A very deaf old lady, walking along the street, saw an Italian turning a peanut roaster. She stood looking at it, awhile, shook her head and said: "No, I shan't give you any money for such music as that. I can't hear any of the tunes, and, besides, it smells as if there were something burning inside."

TARDY

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WITH fumbling hands and awkward feet
A youngster slipped into his seat,
Assumed the teacher's look to meet.

There is a panic in his heart,
But not of fear—but just to start
The day not having done his part.

And sometimes of rebellion, too,
"Of course, she'll blame it all on you,
And think you played. It isn't true."

Ah, what's the use of being good?
He ran the fastest that he could.
She won't believe him. No one would.

And so he stumbles through the day,
And stutters things he has to say,
And wishes he could run away.

But Mother had to telephone,
Mother had matters of her own,
And so he had to dress alone.

Maybe he was a little slow,
That's why he's late. Well, maybe so,
He says, but how was he to know?

Mother had duties to be done,
And quite forgot about her son.
"My goodness! Here's you cap. Now run!"

But when the children stand in line,
If some one says at nine,
I hope the fault is never mine.

THE WHY OF SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

THE PLANTAIN

THAT pesky weed, the plantain, which people have to dig out of their lawns and dooryards is anything but a romantic or mystic plant in appearance and yet it figures prominently in myth and superstition. In this country it appears in folk-medicine as a cure for bee stings and something to "draw out poison" from any wound or sore.

The Indians call it white man's foot for with the white man the plantain came to this country as it has traveled in his company to all parts of the earth. A native of temperate Asia and Europe the weed has been introduced to the tropics and never appears where he is not or has not been. This can be accounted for, of course, without calling upon the supernatural. The indigenous seed may be accidentally carried abroad just as the immigrant came to this country in the hold of a ship, but just from British ships. But to the unreflecting there is something rather uncanny in the way in which the plantain follows the white man's footsteps. The name itself is from "planta," meaning the sole of the foot. In the country of origin the plantain is sometimes called way-bread and the fact that it so persistently haunts the tracks of man is accounted for by an old legend of German origin to the effect that it was formerly a maiden who, after long waiting in vain for the arrival of her lover, was changed into this weed. And in this form she has ever since haunted the footsteps of men looking for the recent one. In this ancient legend we see again the idea of primitive man of a metamorphosis by which natural and vegetable forms were changed the one into the other. To those who regarded mankind as descended from the oak or the ash it seemed quite natural that a disconsolate maiden should be changed into a plantain.

Moon's Changes

Every month the moon goes through all the changes in the amount of daylight in her rising from the smallest to the largest, but ordinarily these are not taken special account of. As the sun and full moon must be in opposite parts of the sky, autumn is the season when the full moon and least retardations come together.
